D'art!

The flesh smiles, a sweet sick child and the factory trembles. In the workshop floors above, the machines groan, a noise soaking, indention with child slivers and I feel that it's alright. She'll get better. Do not be afraid.

The light window wants to, break in, but it will blind her, yet set me free.
Liberation, can't wait, she still has to see, to describe to me the heavens in her mind. Her flesh smiles, a sickly, sweet woman, swages so fast in this industrial Terror
Terror, decayed by the hunger of time. "The garden is here you make it." She says.

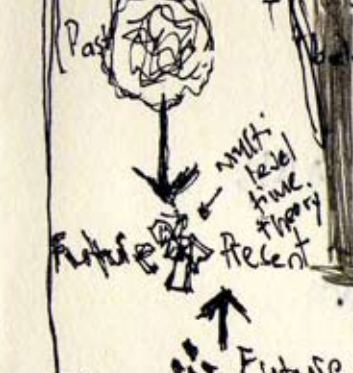

I smell oil on her skin, salt in her eyes. Kiss it. Taste her love. "I can forget," she whispers, "The Creatures have no fear of me." The machine groans, a protest an invitation to deconstruct. It wants us, it wants our bones, our veins, with wires and veins but she is calling out to be heard. I am called to the light.

~~Medicine~~ The mech won't take it. I don't know, I don't know the time, a part. "I desire, to find us." "I can forget's light, the light that is not light."
That is the sign. Conquerly I carry her, a growing out of a growing house.

I carry her down into the vacant Canteen.
The hands of God will feed her. She'll get better.

I put her on the metal table, like a sacrifice, whatever. cold and white. 6'
in the whole in a fridge is released as I open the door, light from death.
She inhales. Smiles. She remembers. She thinks. She remembers.

Drink up the droplets. Eternal juices. "I can forget's light, the light that is not light."
"The father forgives, just as so does the smile." "I can forget's light, the light that is not light."
I know I'm on the right path. The light is here, the light is here.

PROLOGUE

You did good bunnie.

It was so
weird...

What do you mean

A dream like me up. A dream of me in the past. Seeing me in the now.

That's trippy

Quite.

At least we are alive.

uh
huh...
